I was listening to the outer limits interview last night and the subject of the mind experiments was brought up,he was telling his guests of the great results he observed and that he was more or less afraid to continue with them.
It is my personal belief that they must continue, these experiments can play a very large role in the evolution of our species.
Who knows what can be done with it?
It could play a large role in our enlightenment, maybe we can eradicate cancer and other illness.
We'll never know if we don't try.
However, we need some one to orchestrate these experiments on a grand scale.
Art started them so I think he should continue with them. And continue they must.
This is too important to let die.

For example bringing rain to Texas could 1) bring too much rain and flood them out, or 2) rain in Texas might create a drought of enormous proportions elsewhere. It is a very interesting dilemma, how to do good in one area without having a corresponding negative effect somewhere else. I too feel that these experiments should continue, but obviously have to be very carefully thought out. First, we must do no harm. IP: Logged

I agree with you Lou "No harm" and "we should be careful what we wish for"

Since this is new for most of us it will take some "tuneing in"/"learning" to get it right.

Mistakes are expected in the begining, that is a natural part of the learning process.

(I believe we are being watched over/being protected by a higher power)

This is a step we must take!!!

If we dont we will die of stagnation.

(Cant stay in the third grade forever)

(physical plane)

If we do we will be guided to a new level.

It is a must do situation.....too me!
