Ooops!

Spike Mike - good point - they are traditionally at 9:00 PM Pacific Standard Time. Midnight for you EastCoasters!

And Central/Mountain/or Pacific Time for you Texans!

 You know I'm there even if I dont post.

Okay,,,I'm just wondering how the Abbys liver got messed up?? I hope it didnt get into some chocolate cats as well as dogs can not handle the stuff!!

I lost a dog to chocolate two Easters ago when the kids had an easter egg hunt in the back yard needless to say the kids didn't find all the eggs but the dog did.

So I know what Abby is going through,,poor little kitty.

Good thoughts from me to Abby this Friday

Art and Ramona need support and prayer right now, especially with all the new changes...and hopefully a great and wonderful smooth transition. Abby is in there BIG TIME! Yes, and a speedy recovery to Abby! IP: Logged

I'll do my best to send "good vibrations". Linda, I read a post from you about a week ago where you were telling about having a visit from you cat Clancy that had passed on. The strange thing is that I also lost my 16 year old cat named Clancy back in September. I miss him everyday and would love to have a sweet visit from him. He was a Seal Point Siamese(sp?) and was a real sweet heart. I want to get another one from the humane society, but just haven't had the heart to "replace" him yet. Anyway, wanted to share that with you [This message has been edited by Cekay (edited 12 January 2001).] IP: Logged

You are on your way back. Can we all do another mind blast for Ray's kitty cat, Naggie? She's under the weather with a urinary tract infection, which are very dangerous in cats. Naggie is 15, a 3-color calico (white, tan and black). She could use lots of our energy. Ray is really attached to her - calls her his daughter. So, please, can we send her lots of white light and love energy? Thanks so much! IP: Logged
