This is a really good show. the first time I saw it it was half the size on my flash 'help desk'. I was glad to finally get to see the whole thing in regular size. Thanks!

A couple of interesting notes:

I recently met a survivor of the Arizona at the American Legion near me in Livonia. He was blown off the ship into the water... I became a member of the Legion a few weeks ago.

A few years ago I struck up a friendship with a guest at one of the fish dinner's that the Legion holds on Fridays. We exchange info and jokes and such via email. I sent him the link to my Pearl Harbor page. He downloaded the file, thanked me for the "excellent" presentation (by National Geographic) and said, "By the way, I have a first cousin still aboard the Arizona. I hope to make it out there to pay my respects someday."

Small World...

Here is a link to the Online version of Remembering Pearl Harbor if you would like to take a peek at this interactive presentation. If you have a slow connection there is a bit of waiting as segments load and sometimes while the men "who were there" are speaking - it stops to buffer because the downloading is too slow. This is not the case when you have downloaded the presentation since the program then resides on your computer (refer to my first post in this string). With the download program sometimes it will say "loading", but it is already loaded - it was designed that way to give you time to read some of the text. Also, I wrote a Readfirst.txt to help you become familiar with the "Attack Map" in the download version.

Here is a link I uncovered to bypass all the ads. 😊 The top of the frame gets thrown off a bit with this link (no big deal) -- it beats having to cope with all the ads...
