So everyone got a mug shot that went to the Super Bowl...
Cameras caught Super Bowl crowd

Surveillance methods in Tampa spur privacy concerns

By Peter Slevin
THE WASHINGTON POST

Feb. 1 — Super Bowl fans never knew it, but police video cameras focused on their faces, one by one, as they streamed through the turnstiles in Tampa on Sunday. Cables instantly carried the images to computers, which spent less than a second comparing them with thousands of digital portraits of known criminals and suspected terrorists.
